

Arizona Daily Star
Tony Davis and Tim Steller
January 22, 2010

A report from the Department of the Interior OIG issued in January says that the capture and death of the last known wild jaguar in the United States points to criminal wrongdoing. The Arizona Game and Fish Department (AZGFD) first captured the jaguar, Macho B, last February and then officials recaptured him in early March after he showed signs of decline. The report says that AZGFD lacked the appropriate permits needed for capturing a jaguar, intentionally or not, which violates the Endangered Species Act. After a physical examination at the Phoenix Zoo, Government officials and veterinarians concluded that Macho B should be euthanized after determining he had irreversible kidney failure.

Click here to read more about Macho B. 